TECHNOLOGY PLAYS A ROLE FROM BIRTH

Each generation's proficiency and aptitude for using technology as part of their dining experience has a lot to do with how long it's been a part of their lives.

GEN Y AND Z ARE THE TECHIEST DINERS

8 out of 10 are likely to order via tablet if it's offered.¹

64% would choose to have a robot, self-driving car or drone deliver their food.¹

TO-GO IS A CONVENIENCE THAT'S HERE TO STAY

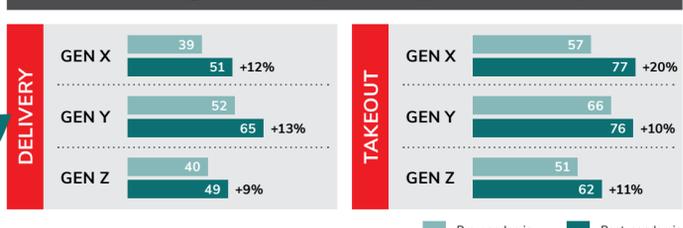

Across all generations, the convenience of takeout and delivery will continue to propel to-go services forward long after the pandemic is entirely behind us.

46%

of diners don't expect their to-go habits to go back to pre-pandemic levels.²

Order to-go at least 1x per month (percent of diners)

OPPORTUNITY

Foodservice operations should embrace new tactics and tools to improve their to-go experience for all generations.

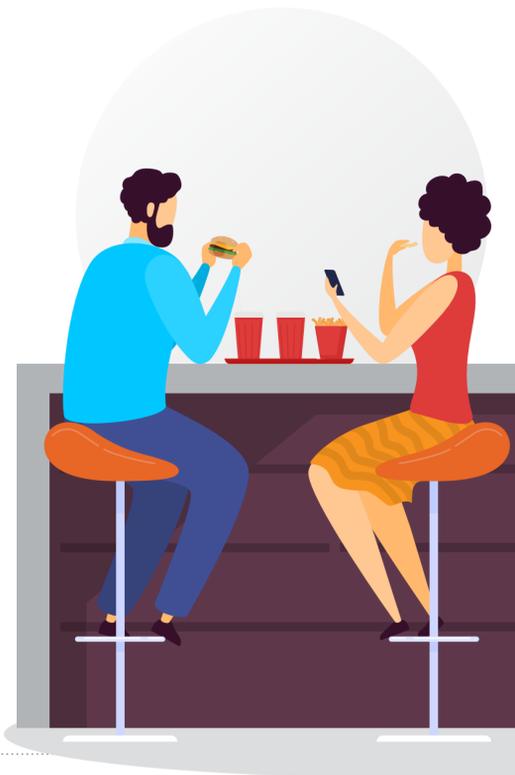

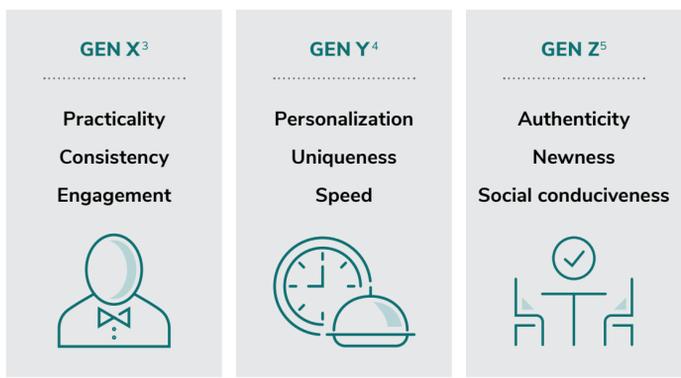

ON-PREMISE DINING PREFERENCES

Traditional dining experiences are still in demand, but that doesn't mean all generations look for the exact same qualities during a visit.

Diners who prefer a traditional on-premise experience where a server takes their order and brings the bill.¹

WHAT'S VALUED IN AN ON-PREMISE EXPERIENCE?

APPETITE FOR EMERGING TRENDS

Gen X diners are adopting the latest and greatest foodservice and menu trends, but not as aggressively as younger Gen Y and Z audiences.

Would likely purchase a meal kit from a favorite restaurant.¹

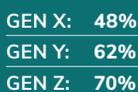

TAKEAWAY

Operators should no longer think about on-premise dining and at-home meal prep as an either-or decision for customers.

Are more likely to choose an establishment that offers to-go alcohol.¹

TAKEAWAY

To-go alcohol trends show signs of sticking around beyond the pandemic and may be worth experimenting within states where they're permitted.

Likely to use new ordering and payment tech if offered.¹

TAKEAWAY

Amidst labor shortages, operators should consider how technology can help automate areas within the customer experience.

70% of Gen X and Y enjoy trying new food and drink.⁶
